DID YOU KNOW?

during the european colonisation of the areas now known as latin america, in 1494, portugal and spain signed the treaty of tordesillas, and established an imaginary line along a north south meridian west of the cape verde islands. all the land west of the line (so mostly south american soil) would belong to spain, and all the land to the east, to portugal. as an accurate measurements of longitude were impossible at that time, the line was not strictly enforced, resulting in a portuguese expansion of brazil across the median.
